Chapter 41: The Dominion of Peace

The second clones of Sung Jin-Woo and Sung Su-Ho stood in a secluded space deep within the heart of the Pavilion of the Divine Legacy. Their mission was one of immense significance: to use the power of the Scepter of Dominion to reshape the fabric of loyalty and submission across the multiverse, beginning with Earth itself.

The Scepter of Dominion-a divine tool forged from the power of the Absolute Crown-was imbued with a singular purpose: to bind the hearts and wills of all living beings, bringing unity, control, and unwavering loyalty to the Divine Triad. While its powers were formidable, they were subtle and far-reaching. The scepter did not demand obedience through force, but rather altered the essence of beings themselves, intertwining loyalty and submission into their very cores.

The Power of the Scepter

The Scepter of Dominion was not an object of mere might, but a conduit for the creation of harmony in the multiverse. The second clones, as masters of this tool, were able to influence and shape the nature of all living things within its reach. Its powers were profound:

1. Essence of Loyalty:
The scepter's influence could imbed a deep sense of unwavering loyalty within any being, regardless of their origins, race, or hierarchy. It didn't control their thoughts directly but subtly guided their actions, instilling a desire to serve the Divine Triad and their vision for peace and prosperity.

2. Essence of Submission:
With the Scepter, the second clones could merge the concept of submission into the very being of those affected. Submission did not mean surrender of will, but rather an acceptance of the natural order governed by the Triad, an understanding that the path of submission led to collective unity and growth.

3. Peaceful Domination:
Unlike the tyranny imposed by other forces in the multiverse, the Scepter of Dominion worked through the creation of a peaceful, almost serene kind of dominance. It didn't crush the will but instead aligned it with the goals of the Divine Triad. It was a harmonious flow of energy that blended the desires of individuals with the greater cause.

The Effect on Earth

When the second clones first activated the Scepter of Dominion, the effects were subtle but profound. At first, the changes were imperceptible-tiny shifts in the behavior of those closest to the clones, small acts of deference, increased cooperation. But soon, the ripple effect spread far and wide.

1. The S-Rank Hunters:
The most noticeable change occurred among the S-Rank hunters, those who had long served as the protectors of Earth. Once influenced by the power of the scepter, they began to move in sync with the will of the Divine Triad, their loyalty unshakable. No longer were they simply warriors-they were now true allies in a greater cause, fighting not only for survival but for the glory and future of the multiverse.

2. Government and Military:
Across Earth, governments and military leaders found themselves inexplicably aligned with the Triad's wishes. Their decisions, once driven by national interests or personal gain, began to reflect an overarching desire for global peace and unity. The essence of loyalty intertwined with their leadership, forging alliances that transcended old conflicts. Tensions between nations waned, replaced by cooperative endeavors that focused on the well-being of the Earth and its future in the greater multiverse.

3. The Common People:
Even the common citizens of Earth felt the subtle pull of the Scepter. They began to show greater respect for their leaders and authorities. Disputes became fewer, and even the most common of people found themselves believing in the ideal of a united world-one where their lives had meaning in the grand order established by the Divine Triad.

The Influence Spreads

Though the Scepter's power began on Earth, the second clones could feel its influence reaching beyond the planet's boundaries. The very essence of loyalty and submission began to resonate across realms, threading its way into the hearts of beings far removed from Earth, in distant galaxies and universes.

The Scepter worked not only on Earth but reached into every living being across the multiverse, altering their very nature to fit within the ever-expanding vision of the Divine Triad. Each living being began to feel a connection, even if they were unaware of it. Their instinct now leaned towards the Triad's ideal of unity and peace.

The Consequence of Power

However, not all was entirely free from consequences. As the power of the Scepter spread, some began to question the depths of their free will. Though no overt force or command was issued by the clones, some beings felt the influence of the Scepter as a change within themselves-an urge to follow, an almost predestined desire to bend their will to the Triad's cause.

The second clones, though conscious of this, recognized the necessity of such a force. The multiverse had been fragmented and torn for too long. The influence of the Scepter was not one of tyranny but one of restoration-a rebalancing that would allow for lasting peace. They were not making slaves; they were creating allies, followers of a cause much greater than any one individual's desire.

The Second Clones' Reflection

As the clones stood together, watching the effects of the Scepter unfold across Earth and the multiverse, they felt the weight of their mission. They were not mere instruments of war or conquest-they were the architects of a new order, a new reality where the chaos of conflicting wills would no longer reign.

They were becoming something more: not rulers, but stewards, guiding the universe toward a future where harmony could thrive.

As the chapter closed, the echoes of the Scepter's power continued to hum, ever-present, reaching out toward every corner of existence, binding it to the will of the Divine Triad.
